

Matt McCormack Evans, Director

Expertise

Transformation and service improvement; Target Operating Model design; operational service reviews; strategy development; process design; housing regulation.

About

Matt is an experienced consultant who leads Altair's transformation and change offer, as well as delivering strategy development and regulatory advisory projects.

Matt works across socially focused sectors, supporting a variety of organisations, including 100 - 100,000-home housing associations, national care and support providers, ALMOs, local authorities, and central governments.

Matt has a background in the charitable sector, supporting organisations to influence the political and public agenda. He has been with Altair for 10 years, spending most of that time delivering a range of transformation and strategy projects, including Target Operating Model (TOM) design, corporate strategy development, service reviews, options appraisals, and process design projects.

When not working, Matt is usually kept busy by his three young children. He also spends time watching rugby league, listening to audiobooks, and learning to handstand (but never at the same time).

Recent Altair Assignments

- Independent options review of an ALMO for a Local Authority
- Development of a Target Operating Model for large national care and support provider
- Options development of an Independent Living Service
- Service review for large national RP
- Target Operating Model design for a large national RP

Background

Working on equalities issues in the not-for-profit sector

Contact centre coaching / management

Durham University - MA Philosophy

